Guardian is excited to announce the arrival of its fifth anniversary for its anti-piracy barrier. The founders of Guardian Maritime Ltd Teresa and David Stevens are very excited to have now passed the 5 year marker on the first ship installed with the Guardian system. On 20th June 2012 the CMA CGM Bellini became the first commercial vessel to have the Guardian system installed on her lower poop deck.

A bold step by CMA CGM to combat the dangers of piracy has paid off giving substantial savings and resulting in no replacements having to be supplied. Both Maersk Line and CMA CGM have now had Guardian systems protecting their container vessels for over 5 years. As the original claim by Guardian was that the system was warranted for five years there can be no doubt that the durability of Guardian can be proclaimed a success. No other Anti-Piracy barrier system can make this claim.

In addition to the anniversary Guardian can also announce its pride at having defeated five piracy attacks in the Gulf of Guinea. Teresa and David are proud of the fact Guardian has denied pirates the capture and ransom of the vessels worth hundreds of millions of pounds and an incalculable value in cargo, but are proudest at saving over 100 mariners from the terrors of captivity with its associated pain and suffering for crews and that those men and women have returned to their families unharmed.

Guardian goes “self-install”. In an effort to keep costs down for ship-owners and operators whilst having the best Anti-Piracy system available on their vessels, Guardian Maritime is now offering to provide would be clients the opportunity to have the crew install the Guardian system. David Stevens of Guardian said “Of course in our opinion the best way to install Guardian is by using our installers but many clients are now eager for their own crews to carry out the install during transit. By providing clear instruction to the crew via a specially filmed installation, the crew quickly learn how simple the system is to install and use and by working with Guardian the confidence of the crew is enhanced”.

Guardian Maritime is also pleased to announce that working in partnership with a finance brokers we can now offer a finance option to anyone wishing to purchase Guardian Barriers, this helps to spread the cost and allows budgets to be managed over a longer term. •
